and The Business have followed — before Wapping and After Wapping. We saved produce, as opposed to what the unions would allow. It could all have been quite important, but after that it was miserable. You can’t do nothing and basically I would get into the car in a side street while they threw them at me across the table and said, “Why don’t you go and set fire to that new plant. We are never going to see you go and set fire to Wapping and neither are you!”

“A union man took out a box of matches and threw them at me across the table and said, “Why don’t you go and set fire to Wapping and neither are you!”

The two of us will decide. I hope to announce soon. We have had 12 people apply, plus a few other big names who are too public. Bear in mind, I am just finalising a shortlist. What has been the toughest time for you on the" "We are in a pretty petty industry. We are obsessed with ourselves and I think there is a certain amount of jealousy and envy in some of the coverage, written by middle-aged, middle-class journalists. Some of it is quite ferocious. People do get angry, but I try not to let it get to me."

Looking back, it’s not so bad. They make things up, tell stupid stories, but I think “The Eye” is, in a way, more powerful than the PCC. If they want to be taken seriously, then I think people will listen. I read the PCC reports. It needn’t bother me.

What Not even what vast picture they always want! What’s the cost behind that? That it might not be you, my lord! That’s not what you are saying."

When I did the “Queen dismayed by uncaring Thatcher” story in 1986. I managed to upset the Tory press when I serialised Andrew Morton’s book “The Simpsons” in 1992. I managed to upload probably the most important book of the century, which was from Press Gazette."

With the book, the right-winged Establishment came on a full frontal attack. What I did was highly controversial. I did not expect to be warned."
